High court shows it cares

Two children have won landmark legal battles which should improve the lives of child carers around the country.

In the first case to be brought under The Carers' Recognition and Services Act 1995, Newham Council agreed at the end of January to assess the needs of Elisha Whittingham, 14, who, along with her mother, looks after her severely disabled sister.

Two weeks earlier in another High Court case, 11-year-old Simon Bradford from Tower Hamlets won the right to have his housing needs assessed, after he was bullied for caring for his mother who has arthritis and epilepsy.

Elisha Whittingham had to bathe her ten-year-old sister in a washing up bowl because Newham Council had failed to install a suitable shower. Her sister Veniece has epilepsy and cerebral palsy.

In the High Court the council also agreed to provide emergency respite care for Elisha and her mother, to assess her mother's needs and to install a shower.

Miss Whittingham said: "Elisha was going to school tired and her school work was suffering. She was caring for Veniece instead of going out with her friends."

Government statistics show that there are between 19,000 and 51,000 young carers in the UK. The Government had initially been opposed to including children in the Carers' Act, arguing that they were already covered by the Children Act.

Jill Pitkeathley, chief executive of the Carers National Association (CNA), said: "This case demonstrates how important it was to include young carers within the Act. It shows very dramatically how disability affects everyone in the family."

Newham Social Services is now carrying out the assessments. A council spokesman said: "We have given a clear commitment to the family and we will abide by it."

In the other case Mr Justice Kay ordered Simon Bradford's local council, Tower Hamlets, to carry out an assessment under the Children Act.

The council had previously assessed Simon's housing needs along with the rest of the family. It told DN they were already on the list for urgent rehousing, but that suitable accommodation was in short supply.

Francine Bates, CNA assistant director, said: "Simon's case highlights graphically stigma that disabled people and their carers encounter daily.

"We hope that local authorities will take note of the case and ensure that children like Simon, a young carer, are properly housed with their families in adapted and safe accommodation."

However, the family's solicitor, Nicola Macintosh, said there had been no let-up in the violence against the family since the case.

Simon's mother Anita, told DN: "I am scared stiff of going out of the house and they are still having a go at Simon.'

Wheelchair voucher scheme slammed

Wheelchair users and therapists have criticised the Government over the implementation of the wheelchair voucher scheme.

Under the scheme, users will be given three options - to take a standard NHS wheelchair, or be given a voucher and contribute towards the cost of a chair from a range selected by the wheelchair service (partnership option), or use their voucher and contribute towards the extra cost of a chair of their choice (the independent option).

Peter Mansell, chief executive of the Spinal Injuries Association, said that while it would improve choice for some, others could still be left with inadequate chairs. "It will only benefit those who have got some dosh.

"It is not addressing the issue of quality of wheelchair provision within the NHS."

Pru Cartwright, chair of the National Wheelchair Managers' Forum, said that there were not enough skilled wheelchair therapists to explain the scheme to clients and assess wheelchair suitability.

But the Government said the scheme improved choice and that any extra administration was being funded.

Drivers' distress

Disability groups and others are upset by Motability's decision to change the eligibility criteria for its Driver's Fund, set up to pay for vehicle adaptations for wheechair users.

To reduce the waiting list of 42, Motability introduced an "assisted driver" criteria which allows for someone to help the driver in and out of the vehicle.

"If you cannot go around on your own, it undermines the whole concept of empowerment that the fund was established for," said Stephen Bradshaw of the Spinal Injuries Association, which lobbied for the fund.

But grants committee chairman Joe Hennessy assured DN that it was a short term solution to get disabled drivers mobile.

Baby test shock

Antenatal tests are being virtually forced on some pregnant women, with health professionals making assumptions that screening is needed and that a disabled foetus would automatically be aborted, according to the National Childbirth Trust.

In a survey of 2,700 women, it studied 352 cases in detail. It found 17 per cent said the hospital had made assumptions and 10 per cent had felt pressurised.

One woman reported the consultant as saying: "If there's something wrong with the baby we just get rid of it."

Pitfalls of going

Quality of care for disabled and elderly people could suffer if Tory plans to privatise social services go ahead.

The Association of Directors of Social Services (ADSS) warns that privatisation of the country's £8 billion care programme will lead to a "quick and certain" reduction in standards.

President Bob Lewis said in January that leaving provision solely to non-statutory suppliers could lead to a "menacing monopoly of private sector provision, with all the dangers of price-hiking implicit in such a situation".

A Department of Health White Paper on social services, to be published in March, is expected to introduce compulsory competitive tendering for most of social services.

In Kent, where the county council faces a shortfall of £24 million for its social services provision, home care for elderly and disabled people has already been contracted out in a desperate attempt to save cash.

A Department of Health spokeswoman said: "We are looking for the best way to provide the service. This is a White Paper which means there will be much discussion before anything is decided."

• Bus privatisation has made it more difficult for passengers to get information which would allow them to plan their journeys, says a new report, leading to fears that visually impaired and blind people are losing out.

The report, Making Connections, by the UK Round Table on Sustainable Development, says: "Operators see more financial advantage in competing than in coordination, and are often reluctant to participate in through-ticketing, synchronised services and information systems."

Feeding scandal in NHS

Disabled people are not being fed properly in NHS hospitals raising fears that some elderly patients are being deliberately starved, says a report.

Hungry in Hospital cites one relative of an elderly patient, who said: "We feel there was a policy on his ward that if you were expected to recover, you were helped to eat. If not, you were left to fade away."

The report, published by the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales, urges the Department of Health to ensure accusations are investigated.

It adds: "In some hospitals no one is taking responsiblity for ensuring that patients are eating."

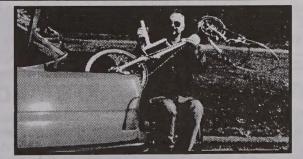

It says people with learning disabilities may not understand how to order and people with visual impairments may not realise that food has arrived.

Pam Jones was disgusted at the way catering staff in one hospital treated her mother Ivy, from Liverpool, who had restricted movement and was in hospital with heart problems before she died last year.

"On at least one occasion they left the food out of my mother's reach. When she asked them to move the tray closer, they said they did not have the time."

The report suggests that one cause of the problem may be a shortage of nurses.

War pension row drags on

The Government is coming under mounting pressure to withdraw tougher rules on war pensions for deafness.

The rules mean that the effects of ageing cannot be considered in assessing pension eligibility.

A pension can now be obtained only if a hearing loss of at least 20 per cent is attributable to gunfire while the person is still in the forces. This effectively rules out most new claims for war disablement pension for hearing loss.

The Government climbed down over general cuts in payments in January. It planned to insist that war pensioners had to produce independent evidence of a worsening of their condition before their entitlement could be reviewed. This idea has now been scrapped.

It also proposed to save millions by phasing out the war widow's rent allowance.

But later Social Security Secretary Peter Lilley said: "We will not proceed with the original proposal to abolish war widow's rent allowance for new claims."

Lord Ashley of Stoke said: "It is now clear that the Government has been wrong in claiming it has the weight of medical evidence on its side. The Secretary of State should immediately order an investigation and, this time, have it conducted by fully qualified and respected experts in the field."

The Royal National Institute for Deaf People and the British Legion are calling for a re-examination of the medical evidence. Lord Mackay has agreed to cut through the red tape holding up 18,000 war pension appeals to tribunals. Many appeals involve changes in benefits ordered by the social secu-

Mental health split

Mental health charities are split over Government plans for the future of mental health services.

Developing Partnerships in Mental Health, a green paper published in February, outlines a number of options for changing the present system.

At the moment, health authorities and local authorities share responsibility for provision. The green paper follows a number of high profile killings and suicides by mentally ill people which have sparked demand for better service coordination.

SANE has welcomed the most radical option - the creation of single mental health and social care authorities for mentally ill

But MIND has opposed this and demanded that already successful services are introduced across the country, including 24-hour crisis services to help people in the early stages of distress and involvement of users in the development of services.

The National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts (NAHAT) favours mental health agencies headed by a single manager to commission services, with health authorities and social services keeping their existing responsibilities - also outlined in the green paper.

Other options include one authority (most likely the health authority) taking responsibility for services, or delega-

End of the line: Richard Saunders is set to hang up his flags after 12 years as a football referee's assistant. Mr Saunders was born with shortened arms — what he describes as "an early form of thalidomide" — and has been running the line up and down the divisions after starting out in the game as a footballer. Now 44, he has not come across any other physically disabled match officials in his time in the game. He says players, particularly from the big clubs, are more likely to be verbally abusive, but not about his disability. On the one or two occasions a disparaging voice from the crowd has commented on him being disabled, he has made a joke of it and given as good as he's got.

"I'm not against being used as a role model for disabled youngsters wanting to get into the game – if they've got the desire and ability for the job."

He now intends to concentrate on his golf handicap.

Crisis in the capital

Cash shortages have caused a mental health care crisis in the capital, according to a new report.

Cases of psychosis in inner London are double that in other inner cities, while 11 of the 26 recent investigations into killings by mental health patients were in London.

London's Mental Health, published by the King's Fund, says the closure of wards to fund community-based care has led to an in-patient services crisis. In some parts of London 25 per cent of those needing a bed have to wait.

The report adds that there is also a shortage of psychiatric staff, psychologists and community-based residential facilities.

"It is more difficult to get help in London than in other cities," says the report. "The formula for allocating resources to deprived inner city areas needs to be revisited."

Mental health charity MIND national director, Judi Clements, said: "MIND has been warning Government that the failure to properly fund comprehensive community care would lead to a crisis."

Marjorie Wallace, chief executive of SANE, said: "It is disgraceful that seriously mentally ill people are either discharged too early or are not admitted to hospital for the care they need."

But Health Secretary Stephen Dorrell defended the funding formula, which he argued had been changed to reflect the fact that there was a higher incidence of mental illness in London.

He said the Government was spending an extra £25 million on mental health services for London.

• Half of all psychiatric hospitals are operating above capacity with more patients on their books than beds available, according to a survey by the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts.

MPs probe Motability

The Public Accounts Committee, Parliament's financial watchdog, has demanded to see two key reports about Motability – from solicitors Bircham purporting to show that governors did not know the financial position, and from merchant bank Schroder showing that in 1993 Motability's profit was apparently twice that of a typical leasing company.

MPs grilled Motability director Noel Muddiman and Department of Social Security permanent secretary Ann Bowtell for two hours last month and may call them back.

Working from the National Audit Office report published last summer, they wanted to know, among other things, why the charity, which now has 300,000 users representing nearly 6 per cent of the car leasing market, needed £26.9 million reserves in 1995, if it was getting the best terms for its customers, and if the lending banks had made too much profit.

Mrs Bowtell and Mr Muddiman put many of Motability's problems down to the rapid growth of the scheme and argued that changes had been made and monitoring established. But this did not satisfy some MPs.

It was noted that Motability's governors were male, middleaged and long serving. Mr Muddiman said it was a matter of finding people with necessary skills.

Jean Ashcroft, Arthritis Care's director of public policy and information, would be willing to serve. She said: "Governors of Motability should be representative of the users, and the majority of users have arthritis."

Douglas Campbell, director of the Disabled Drivers' Association, is still not convinced that the discounts on the Motability scheme are adequate. "I hope the committee will pursue that."

He also wants them to "get to grips" with the 10th Anniversary Trust. "It is not made up of profits, but of money taken off disabled people."

ME girl in bid for school

The mother of a 16-year-old girl with ME is demanding that the local education authority educate her daughter until she is 19.

Kate Gifford, from Colchester, has been unable to attend school since she was 13 and can only cope with two hours of home tutorial a week.

But Essex County Council does not think it necessary to give Kate an educational statement of needs which would guarantee her schooling after Iuly.

"Kate has missed vital years of school and yet even the minimal education she gets may soon be stopped. How can she ever catch up?" said her mother Ann.

Mrs Gifford lost her case to have Kate statemented at an educational tribunal last November and is now appealing against the decision.

"Hundreds of children with ME face these sorts of difficulties," said a spokeswoman for the National Association for the Education of Sick Children.

"It is often impossible to get a statement for them."

An Essex County Council spokesman said Kate's needs would be reviewed in the summer and that it might be possible for her school to continue home tuition in the sixth form.

Eye test cost plea

More than half a million elderly people are at risk of losing their sight because they cannot afford an eye test, according to a new report by the Royal National Institute for the Blind (RNIB).

Potentially blinding eye conditions such as glaucoma can often be treated if they are detected early enough.

But a study of nearly 1,500 people in the report Losing Sight of Blindness showed that 26 per cent aged 60 and over have not had an eye test in the last two years -500,000 would not have a test because of the cost.

One pensioner, typical of thousands, told how the fee put her off for so long that when she did visit the optometrist it was too late to save her sight.

Universal free eye tests were abolished in 1989 and the RNIB is calling for tests for older people and other groups at high risk of blinding conditions to be free.

"Many older people are needlessly losing their sight," said Sue Grindey, manager of the RNIB's eye health programme.

"The cost of re-introducing eye tests for people aged 60 and over would only be about £32 million per year. This would be more than offset by the savings on the cost of services to those who may lose their sight."

A spokesman from the Department of Health said many pensioners could afford to pay it and it was right that they should.

Long stretch for 'Lazarus'

An epileptic man who conned churchgoers into believing he was a brain damaged wheelchair user, then faked a miracle recovery during a service, was jailed for 21 months.

Paul Redhead, 29, from Coventry, staged the "Lazarus reenactment" after he was given a temporary wheelchair.

He duped the congregation into raising money for him, then staged a "cure" when he became fed up with the hoax, Birmingham Crown Court heard.

Canada joins fraud battle

The battle to combat social security fraud has crossed the Atlantic as Britain and Canada join forces to "beat the cheats".

The two countries will now share information to investigate cases of suspected fraud.

More than £125 million is paid in benefits to UK citizens living in Canada and more than £1 billion to 800,000 claimants worldwide.

Security, Peter Lilley, said that the arrangement with Canada would undoubtedly save money.

The move follows the success of similar arrangements in Europe. In one case a man claiming Incapacity Benefit from a Preston address was working as a builder in Portugal for seven years.

"It's a good job that you can walk - none of our prisons are wheelchair accessible!"

US cuts benefits

More than 135,000 disabled children from low income families in the United States could lose an average of $424 (£249) a month in disability benefits under a new welfare law.

The Welfare Reform Law, passed last August, forced the Federal Government to redefine disability to tighten eligibility. Now the administration has decided that children with certain learning disabilities, behavioural or hyperactivity disorders and arthritis, might not be eligible.

Marty Ford, from learning disabilities' charity The Arc, said: "They are going to hurt far too many children. It will be devastating to the families."

Fears for deaf patients in hospital

An attempt to improve services for deaf people at a Welsh hospital has backfired with critics labelling the scheme "potentially disastrous".

Some nursing staff at the Cardiff Royal Infirmary (CRI) have been trained in elementary signing in an initiative by the hospital trust.

But the Cardiff District Hearing Impaired Support Group

(CDISG) claims these staff are sometimes used for complex interpreting which can leave deaf patients confused about their condition and treatment.

"With poor communication, a patient may not be able to get across what medication he's taking and the end result could be disastrous," said honorary secretary Cedric Moon. "The trust is leaving itself wide open to being sued for negligence."

He called for regulations on interpreting to be introduced.

The hosptial denied that nurses and receptionists with only stages I and II British Sign Language qualifications acted as interpreters and said that the local health authority's fully-trained signer was used.

"Nurses do not act as interpreters," said Brin Rees-Evans, business manager at the hospital.

"We are trying to push the services available to deaf people forward and it seems to have backfired on us."

Chief executive of the British Deaf Association, Jeff McWhinney, said: "This highlights the fact that deaf people should be encouraged to enter the medical profession themselves."

A good reminder

An electronic pager is helping people with brain injuries to remember their daily routines.

The American-designed device is being tested at the Princess of Wales Hospital in Ely where 27 people have used it.

People with impaired memory can carry around the device known as the Neuropage which reminds them of activities.

It receives pre-set, timed messages from a central computer after users tell staff what personal reminders they want.

"If you use a pager to establish a routine and then take the pager away, some people can then continue that routine without the pager," said Jonathan Evans, a clinical psychologist at the hospital.

Mites get the bite

London researchers are developing a vaccine which could eventually offer immunity from house dust mites - a common trigger of asthma.

The team led by Jonathan Lamb, professor of immunology at Imperial College, London, hopes to use genetic material derived from house dust mites which could enter the body attached to a bacteria such as BCG which is used for immunisation against tuberculosis.

But Professor Lamb stressed that there would be no vaccine in the immediate future

A spokesman for the National Asthma Campaign welcomed the research, but said: "There are other triggers for asthma including cold, smoking and exercise. We do not yet know how to find a cure because of these various triggers."

Arthritis confusion

Hundreds of people with arthritis are not receiving appropriate care because GPs are unaware of effective treatment, the Arthritis Rheumatism Council (ARC) has warned.

Doctors are failing to refer people with rheumatoid arthritis to specialists for early treatment, despite research showing that it is critical, the council claims.

Over the last few years recommendations on ways to treat the condition have emerged. It is now known that the best way to fight it and reduce disability is to attack it aggressively as early as possible.

Genes show fits the mood

Insurance companies are to start demanding the results of genetic tests as a requirement for new policies.

The proposals were published as a code of practice in February and were opposed by some MPs and medical researchers. But applicants for insurance who have previously had genetic tests would be obliged to reveal the results, in a move similar to the demands about HIV tests in the 1980s.

Although genetic tests can reveal an increased risk of developing a disease, they are rarely able to make a definite forecast. A few disorders are associated with a fault in one gene, such as cystic fibrosis and Huntingdon's chorea, but most are likely to result from variations in more than one gene and from environmental influences, such as heart disease and some cancers.

Environmental factors can play an important role in triggering a genetic predisposition to certain diseases, which is why the discrimination inherent in insurance firms asking for test results is so unfair, illogical and potentially dangerous.

Scientists at the Royal Society believe that genetic research will lead to a better understanding of disease mechanisms, cheaper and more accurate diagnoses of common diseases, better drug treatments and tailoring prevention of treatment to take account of genetic factors.

However an increased emphasis on genetics may also result in a belief in genetic determinism namely, you aren't what you eat but what your genes say you are.

As a result, the economic social and cultural factors which help shape people may be ignored, and prevention may often mean selective abortion.

Attitudes to parenthood may also change. Knowingly having children with genetic diseases may be seen as irresponsible.

The Science Museum is running an exhibition on genetics until 13 April, (tel: 0171-938 9788) which gives an accessible introduction to the subject.

Pictures and the words of real people show visitors that genetics is about humans, not just diseases. Tay-Sachs disease and sickle cell broaden the ethnic scope and examples of the effects of social responses to diseases are mentioned.

It reminds us all that there are few laws and regulations about genetics.

Disability groups call on politicians to listen to their views

What we want from government

As the General Election approaches DN has put together three pages of information and opinions. Here, charities have their say.

Connell Gebbie, president of the National Federation of the Blind of the United Kingdom, says: "Whichever party is elected, we want a better appreciation of the problems caused by blindness when awarding Attendance and Dis-Living ability Allowance, a fair deal for blind partially sighted jobseekers, and a set of real teeth for the National Disability Council."

Richard Gutch, chief executive of Arthritis Care, says: "One ment could do to improve the for community care.

The British Council of Disabled People wants the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) repealed. Chair Anne Rae says: "Any new government must repeal the DDA and put in place comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation which would end unequivocably the discrimination and oppression of disabled people in the UK. The current Act does not address discrimination from where it starts, which is education and mobility. Without those two very important clauses, the DDA means nothing."

appropriately delivered."

Director of the Royal Association for Disabil-Rehabilitation,

Bert Massie, says: "Our membership covers people with such a diversity of impairments it would be foolish to single out one issue. Don't lose your vote

Most polling stations are still as inaccessible to disabled people as they were in 1992, according to the charity Scope.

Polls Apart, its survey after the last election, found only 12 per cent of stations were fully accessible, and campaigns development manager Jane Enticott says the situation has not really improved since.

Slippery floors, uneven pathways, steps, and lack of assistance are all cited as problems faced by disabled people when trying to cast their vote.

Scope has sent the facts and a check list to the 1,600-plus parliamentary candidates in the hope that they will help implement measures such as ensuring that there is at least one accessible polling booth for each station and the local authority publicises the registration and postal vote process in appropriate venues, eg. day centres.

Voting by post

Applications for postal/proxy votes have to be made 13 working days before polling day. Ask your electoral registration officer at the town hall for a RPF 7B form.

If you become ill after the 13th day, ask for form RPF9B which has to be signed by a doctor and returned six working days before polling day.

The disability spokespeople outline their aims and beliefs to DN

CONSERVATIVE

"We do not believe in giving wide ranging and ill-defined 'rights' to disabled people. Such rights would be hard to enforce and expensive to implement. A Civil Rights Commission would cost an estimated £51 million a year to run. Expenditure would be better used helping carers, paying for mobility or working costs, rather than subsidising expensive legal battles.

"We will not reinstate the Mobility Component of Disability Living Allowance because it is not right to pay people twice from public funds as extra mobility costs are no longer applicable in hospital.

"We are constantly examining eligibility for Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance. Steps to help disabled people into work are legion. (See below.)

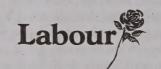

"We recognise the importance of respite care which the Government encourages local authorities to provide as part of community care. We have improved the terms of Invalid Care Allowance, eg the amount carers can earn without affecting their benefit has risen five-fold since 1990. We will continue to examine how support for carers can be strengthened.

"We encourage private personal pensions and have ensured that pensioners' incomes have risen by 60 per cent in real terms since 1979. We are spending £1.2 billion a year extra on poorer pensioners. Creating a minimum income of £125 per week would retard not advance this process and would cost at least £4.3 billion a year.

"While adequate provision must always be available for those who are unable to meet the cost of their care, the principal responsibility for social care must rest with the individual citizen." Mr Burt could not comment on the contents of the manifesto.

"We support comprehensive, enforceable, civil rights for disabled people against discrimination in society or at work, developed in partnership with all interested parties. We see the disability agenda as one of both rights and opportunities and Tony Blair has made clear that increasing opportunities for everyone will be our top priority in government. One of our first priorities will be to establish a Disability Rights Commission to advise ministers.

"On the social care side, we will seek to build on the pioneering work already done in promoting independent living and direct payments for disabled people.

"Large parts of the Disability Discrimination Act are likely to be amended by an incoming Labour government.

"We intend to include carers in local consultations to draw up Community Care plans which determine the services provided by the local councils and the NHS.

"As far as pensioners in general are concerned, the basic state pension will remain nonmeans tested and we will introduce a new Pension Entitlement to tackle pensioner poverty We will also ensure the opportunity of a second tier pension through new Stakeholder Pension schemes whilst retaining SERPS as an option.

"We plan to review eligibility criteria causing the greatest problems [for benefits including Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Attendance Allowance and Incapacity Benefit] and we will also review the cuts to the mobility component of DLA.

"We will review the current targets in government and work with broadcasters, interested parties and the broadcasting industry regulators to ensure as great a proportion of programmes are accessible to deaf people as possible.

"We will, of course, continue to provide free hearing aids to those who need them."

LIZ LYNNE

"The Liberal Democrats are committed to the introduction of full civil rights legislation and the establishment of a Human Rights Commission which would monitor and enforce anti-discrimination legislation for disabled people.

"They are vital in fighting discrimination in the workplace and ensuring that public transport, education and training are more accessible to blind and partially sighted people.

"We would replace the Disability Living Allowance with a Disablement Costs Allowance. The new benefit would be designed to compensate people for the costs of their disability.

"The Government's arguments for removing Mobility Component were very weak and this is why we opposed its plans. It should be reinstated.

"The Access to Work budget should at least be maintained.

"Liberal Democrats are committed to introducing a total state pension based on two elements – a basic state pension, equivalent to the current pension, which would be universal and uprated in line with prices.

"There would also be an additional element paid to those in greatest need which would be indexed to average earnings.

"We would create an independent inspectorate for residential and nursing homes, with published codes of practice and the power to close homes that fall short of required standards.

"The merger of health and social services would stop people falling through the net. Social services should, wherever possible, provide a hand-up to independence. It is vital that the over-65s are eligible for community care direct payments.

"Liberal Democrats would introduce a proper carer's benefit and increase respite care facilities."

THE NUFFIELD FOUNDATION VISCOUNT NUFFIELD AUXILIARY FUND MAKING TECHNOLOGY WORK FOR DISABLED PEOPLE

People with disabilities are more readily given aids and equipment to help overcome their impairments than the necessary support to enable them to use the aids and equipment quickly and with ease. The Nuffield Foundation is therefore offering grants to organisations with ideas for projects investigating, adapting or demonstrating a way of using existing equipment more effectively. Packages for training the user will be eligible for support, as will the evaluation of the use of existing equipment. Applications are invited in two areas: learning and communication aids and mobility aids. The grants cannot be used to help individuals buy or adapt equipment, and projects which mainly benefit an institution should indicate the ways in which the results of the work will be made more generally known. The sum available is £133,000. In 1996 nine grants were made, ranging from £4,700 to £22,735. The closing date is 1 April 1997. Further details may be obtained by writing to:

What have the Conservatives given us? A guide to the last five years

- Further and Higher Education Act put a duty on Local Education Authorities (LEAs) and Further Education Funding Council to consider the needs of people with learning difficulties in securing further education.
- Disability Living Allowance introduced to give benefit to more than 500,000 less severely disabled people unable to qualify under old rules.
- Disability Working Allowance introduced to give extra help to disabled workers on low incomes.
- Building regulations changed to require all new, non-domestic buildings to be accessible.

1993

- Education Act requires LEAs to provide special needs children with mainstream school places.
- Funding for TECs to provide local training for severely disabled people as an alternative to residential care.

• Road Traffic (Driving Instruction by Disabled Persons) Act passed to allow disabled people to become driving instructors.

- Access to Work scheme introduced to give equipment and assistance to disabled people in employment.
- Educational Code of Practice introduced to help schools, LEAs and related services to provide an integrated service.

• Disability Discrimination Act makes it illegal for disabled people to be discriminated against by employers with more than 20 employees and gives a right of access to goods and services. Schools and colleges are obliged to give better information about facilities to disabled students and the Transport Secretary is now able to set minimum access standards for public transport. Other clauses to be phased in.

• Government gave £11.5m to London Dial A Ride services.

- The Community Care (Direct Payments) Act passed to enable local authorities to make cash payments to some disabled people in lieu of services.
- Wheelchair voucher scheme introduced to give more choice to wheelchair users.
- Access to Work budget increased to £19m. Scheme now meets 100 per cent of costs for unemployed; employers meet first £300 per year for present employees and 20 per cent of costs above that.
- Schools Access Initiative makes £10m available to improve access to mainstream schools.

This is not a complete list.

DN speaks to disabled people at three marginal seats in the UK

Rochdale respects Lynne

Liz Lynne, the Liberal Democrat spokesperson on social security and disability, had a majority of 1,839 over Labour in the 1992 election. She is widely respected among disabled people in Rochdale as someone who fights for their rights.

But can she fight off the challenge this time from Labour candidate Lorna Fitzsimons?

Doris Lord, 75, chair of the Access Planning Group Rochdale, will be voting Labour.

"The most tragic thing that the Government did was not letting the civil rights Bill go through," she said. She does not think the Disability Discrimination Act and National Disability Council will do much good, and adds: "In Rochdale it is difficult to get anywhere. There are no dropped floor buses or buses with lifts."

Safia Hussein (below) has three disabled children with physical and learning disabilities. She previously voted Conservative but is undecided this time.

She wants to see better Government funding of local councils. "Everything you ask for, such as the downstairs showers we wanted, takes a long time and they always say there is a lack of money.

"I want more respite care. You only get it for a short time and can't get any in emergencies."

Stephen Jones, 44, is visually impaired and also on the Access Planning Group. He is an undecided voter: "I am not sure whether Labour would introduce full civil rights. They talk about it, but talk is cheap.

"Now that the Government has introduced an employer contribution under the Access to Work Scheme it puts employers off taking on disabled people even more than before."

His wife Kathy, 36, is undecided how to vote. "The candidates come round canvassing but when you ask them for information in an accessible form they have for your vote

a problem."

Philip Howard, 27, will probably vote Labour. "I have to travel to college in an ambulance. I hate it. I want the same things other people my age want. I want accessible transport and access to buildings."

Sarah Loach, 84, (left) said: "I have been going to our local day centre for ten years and I have never seen it like it is today – there are half the helpers and half the kitchen staff. Government cuts spoil everything.

"Liz Lynne comes round to our Age Concern meetings and has a chinwag with us all."

Bristol MP finds little support 14 years on Conservative MP Michael Stern has held the Bristol North West seat for 14 years, winning the 1992 election by just 45 votes. Back in 1987 he had a majority of 6,952 – the highest ever for the seat.

His list of interests in the House of Commons include "mental handicap" and he believes the views of disabled people are very important. But he says he will not be campaigning on any issues relating to them because "That's not my style of politics."

Mr Stern added: "I do get involved in legal issues involving groups of disabled people and I am backing the family of a girl suffering from cerebral palsy who will suffer unless the housing department agrees to adaptations to their house."

Some of his disabled constituents believe that Mr Stern's party has done very little for them.

Gillian Evans, 50, (left) said: "The Government says the amount of benefit you get can give you a normal life, but it is so little that it's just not possible.

Michael Stern MP

"Accessible transport is the most important thing for me, but there isn't any in Bristol, even though it wouldn't cost much."

She also criticised the Disa b i l i t y Discrimination Act. "It's as good as useless because shops are still making excuses for being inaccessible."

Rose Williams, 73, (above) said: "The Government never consult us, but it would save them a lot of money if they did."

Labour candidate Douglas Smith appears to be keeping a low profile.

Beryl Richardson, 75, said she did not know who was standing against Mr Stern.

"You would have thought they would send us some information, but they haven't" she said. Rodney Horne, 54, and wife Jean, 51, (below) said they would both be voting Labour.

Mr Horne said: "The Conseratives have done nothing for disabled people and my quality of life has not improved in the last few years."

Ipswich switch?

Jamie Cann MP

Labour MP Jamie Cann has held his Ipswich seat since 1992 with a majority of 265.

He has intervened on behalf of many disabled people who had problems claiming Disability Living Allowance and visits the town's Disability Awareness Group meetings.

"I was involved in Tom Clarke's campaign to end discrimination in employment and I welcome the DDA but believe it does not go far enough.

"I will fight for better access to public buildings. Disabled people's issues are important and I would encourage them to keep the pressure up – there are a lot of Parliamentarians who will listen."

Most disabled constituents who spoke to DN said they were likely to support Labour rather than the Tory candidate Stephen Castle.

Brian Hammond, 49, said: "Things have improved but not as fast as most people would have liked. I see the DDA as a step backwards and hope an incoming Government would review it.

"Jamie Cann has shown an interest in disabled people. I am inclined to vote for him although I have not completely decided." Cecil Long, 49, said: "Life is a continuing struggle for disabled people. You have to fight for everything. Things haven't improved under the Tories. I would vote for Labour."

Chris Killick, 33, (above) said: "If the Labour Party would commit itself to full civil rights it would get in because of the six million disabled people who would vote for it.

"A new Government should repeal the DDA. Although I haven't got much faith in Labour, I will not vote Conservative."

Madeleine Pye, 42, (right) said: "Things are improving. Having someone like Ann Begg in Parliament must make a difference.

"The next Government should go and meet disabled people and there should be a disability awareness day which all MPs should spend in a wheelchair.

"If Jamie Cann were an independent MP he would have my vote, but I'm unsure about Labour. I'm disillusioned with both parties."

David Burgess, 62, said: "I think that the Government has done a great deal with the DLA and Motability scheme. It's not enough but I will vote Conservative."

Ian Mackintosh believes something must be done urgently to sort out the 'fearful mess' of piecemeal policies and practice

With an election looming, the time is again ripe to raise the matter of a Ministry for Disabled People.

As the father of a seriously disabled little girl, I would like to have a say, because personal experience has convinced my wife and I that something badly needs to be done to sort out what has become a fearful mess.

Various departments are all singing to slightly (sometimes grossly) different hymn sheets, taking advice (sometimes not) from the myriad of special institutions trying to do good, and an army of specialists often convinced (but sometimes endearingly unsure) that they alone hold the key to improving the lot of disabled people.

Take equipment. Quite properly, the state plays a vital role in providing special-needs equipment. But, except for bogstandard items, which ministry - if any- will give the required support can be a lottery.

We have been trying for about two years to get financial support to provide Saskia with a "walker". This device (occasionally available on loan) has no pedals, but Saskia can

Now all of this is clearly nonsense. While the principle of "subsidiarity" is sound and can be applied just as well to regional as to national government where expenditure is primarily local, when it comes to the treatment of disabilities there are no experts, no-one knows for sure what is right for any particular child and the "best" approach may change with time, for example, as a child develops and grows.

The nation as a whole must take responsibility for providing the full range of services which disabled people need, by constructing common guidelines, strategies, funding principles, etc.

In short, we need a Ministry for Disabled People with a national remit, able to put together a coherent set of policies and given enough Treasury funding to provide facilities, services and equipment at local level.

Naturally, it will not be cheap - not, that is, in the short run. But the better a nation looks after its disabled children, the less of a burden – financial and emotional - they are likely to be when grown-up.

In our case, we hope the therapies and education Saskia continues to get - God and the LEA willing – will give her the ability to function productively using 21st Century computer tools. If so, it will have been partly through an effective working partnership between her parents and intelligent, informed officials.

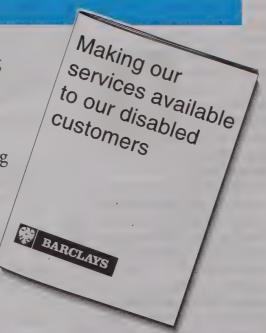

I hope soon to see them all employed to even better effect in a single Ministry serving the needs of all disabled people.

Foolish to feel ashamed

Recent letters in Share Your Problems have asked how disabled people could call themselves "proud" to be disabled. Can I make some suggestions?

First, many of us would distinguish between our impairments, which are medical issues, and our identity as disabled people.

Being disabled means belonging to a social group which faces discrimination and prejudice in society. It is these social and political restrictions which cause most of our problems and which we are campaigning to remove.

We are proud because we are part of a group of people who are strong, support each other and achieve great things. It is this collective of resistance that helps us survive as individuals, and makes us glad to be disabled people. We realise that the problem does not reside in us; it resides in society, and so we are able to feel positive about ourselves and our bodies.

For some people, being disabled means turning into different sorts of people: for instance, men might become less macho and more sensitive. It may open up new opportunities – in sports, in disability arts, as trainers or organisers or activists. It certainly may mean making new friends.

For others, like myself, who have always been disabled, we have nothing to compare ourselves to and so we are proud of our achievements in work or family life. It would be foolish always to feel ashamed of who we are.

None of this is to minimise the pains and problems that having an impairment brings. Instead, it is about celebrating our achievements, and working to make being disabled less restrictive and, ultimately, about empowering ourselves.

And it is about remembering that many of the major figures in human history – from Roosevelt to Cole Porter, from Proust to Plath, from Hawking to Handel to Harriet Tubman were themselves disabled people. I think that's something to be proud of too.

How about Spastics bubble bath?

I have the condition scoliosis a severe spinal curvature which pushes the body into awful deformity. This creates breathing difficulties, heart and mobility problems. Life expectancy is much reduced and as the vertabrae fuse together the pain levels become unbearable.

As a child I went through hell every time The Hunchback of Notre Dame was shown on television. I have walked into classrooms to find blackboard drawings of a hunchback (HB) with my name written beneath.

Now, as the millenium approaches, I find myself once again suffering the stares and whispers of children who have seen the film.

The final straw was to go Christmas shopping in my wheelchair and be confronted by bold signs advertising HB bubble baths, HB soap sets, etc. I was so upset that I went home empty-handed.

My point is that the film and the merchandising are discriminatory and offensive towards people suffering from scoliosis. Do you see Spastics bubble bath or Downs Syndrome soap sets?

I wrote to Disney Studios in the USA but they didn't bother

Can we stop this happening please?

Spice Girl dancing

by Marigold Hope

Late one night, my flatmates and I made our answerphone message. Loudly and out of tune we sang the Spice Girls' song: "Tell me what you want, what you really want, Oh, tell me what you want", etc.

I'll tell you what I want: not another term like the last one. I felt very unhinged. I went out too much, did too many extra curricula activities, had flat and boyfriend problems, bad insomnia and poor grades as a result. I went home at Christmas hating Edinburgh.

Since then, I have made some changes and things have improved. I've dropped most of my outside activities to give myself more space, although I go to meditation classes led by a Scottish Buddhist.

Being relaxed has never been my forte. When I meditate, I become acutely aware of my leg

Too often I break the treaty I made with myself, whereby I recognise the restrictions that my legs put on what I can do, and the warfare between me and my legs continues. I instinctively want to run around. I feel free. I'm like the cavalry. It is not my legs that are doing the running, dancing, standing or stair climbing. But when I stop, my legs retaliate, invading me with pain. Will I resolve this battle? I think meditating is a start.

Many people I know have been having flat problems. I thought not living with my close friends would work. My flatmates are warm people. It's just that I discovered they are completely different to me.

Because they are all best friends, doing the same course as each other, and everything else together too, I began to feel lonely. I tried to join in with them. They got me to do Spice Girl dancing with them, but my heart was not in it. I could not become the tv addict, lottery loving Spice Girl that they wanted me to be.

A tense unspoken subtext started whenever I was with any of them. I ended up "hiding away" in my bedroom, or going to friends' houses. I decided to move out, but the only nice places were inaccessible.

Last week I confronted my flatmates and we talked things through. I wish I had done it sooner. My flat feels like home now. I'm going to live with my close friends next year, but I'm glad I didn't move out.

Things are not totally resolved with my ex-boyfriend yet. After nine intense months, daily phone calls and rendezvous, it is hard to let go. I know the heartbreak will ease. And as my flatmates would say: "Girl Power".

DN 's diary

A smell too far?

Looking through Kirton Healthcare's multi-sensory catalogue, full of wonderful ways to stimulate children and adults in sensory environments, DN came across a reminiscence pack "particularly suitable for use with the elderly". Christmas sounded promising – a heady mix of fir, mulled wine and roast turkey, maybe. But The Black Range, The Old Teapot, Washday, Hospital? Would they appeal to you?

Good to see that Disability Scotland used the "positive about disabled people" logo in its recent ad for a "Post -Director". What was more, the salary started at 333,234.

Hope in Gaza

...but pioneering services face many problems, Anita Loring found

The long sand-choked road lined with dwellings, shops and strips of cultivated land suddenly opened out into a square, and there was Al Amal (Hope City). It is in Khan Younis, a large town at the southern end of the Gaza Strip.

Built by the Palestine Red Crescent Society, Al Amal is the brainchild of Dr Fathi Arafat, brother of Yasser Arafat, Palestine's president.

It is no ordinary centre for people with disabilities. It houses a concert hall, swimming pool, two restaurants, a hotel, a folklore museum and artists' studios as well as assessment rooms, school rooms, workshops and two emergency operating theatres with intensive care beds. The land outside will have outdoor recreation facilities.

Hope: Dr Arafat and Anita Loring

Although building work is not quite finished, so eager was everyone to get started that the schoolrooms are already operating and the craft workshops are in full swing.

How many disabled people there are in Gaza is unknown. Over 750,000 people live in a strip 25 miles long and as little as four miles wide in places. With a high birth rate (about 40,000 deliveries a year), it is estimated that one fifth of the babies will have cerebral palsy, due to consanguinity (marriage between first cousins is common) or because they are premature.

Birth control needs urgent attention. Once a Muslim couple marry they are expected to produce numerous children and, if they don't, their relatives and neighbours wonder why. It is common to meet a woman in her early 30s with 10 children or more.

By contrast to Hope City, the Child Development Centre in Gaza City, founded in 1986 by the Benevolent Society for the Gaza Strip, now faces serious funding problems. The Palestinian family behind the society has money problems of its own. Trained staff have had to leave and when we visited in December there were only two physios facing a long line of mothers and children.

Palestinian land is still surrounded by Israeli controlled land and not easy to visit. When I was there, Gaza had only two entry points, and our papers were heavily scrutinised. There is nearly a mile of no man's land between one check point and the next. Gaza's Minister of Public Relations said that during a recent skirmish 1,700 people died in 72 hours because they could not reach medical care due to checkpoint delays.

I saw Palestinian rehab experts from the West Bank visiting Hope City for a meeting who had to rush off the day after because their "passes" expired at noon.

If professionals had freedom to travel to support each other and exchange information, it would go a long way towards helping to develop services.

Anita Loring is secretary general of The International Cerebral Palsy Society (ICPS).

Can anyone give hope to teenager Hannan Jaafreh, who has learning difficulties? Her Palestinian family is poor, her mother is sick. They live in Jerusalem. She was found caged and living "like an animal" at her home because no one would take responsibility for her care. Just before Christmas, the Israeli social welfare office placed her in a centre costing £1,100 a month. But only for six months. DN and ICPS are campaigning for her long-term support. Please phone DN on 0171-636 5020 or ICPS on 0181-995 5721. AWAD AWAD/OBSERVER

Yasmin, who has had polio, prefers to wear long dresses and skirts. At 4ft 10in, finding skirts that are the right length can be difficult. But she rated the long navy dress from Next's Petite range very comfortable (see below), and found the shorter length indigo skirt from Marks

Safari – so good

Mandy Watmore and husband Ray found paradise on a tour of southern Africa

They say Zimbabwe is Africa's paradise. Having just spent 18 wonderful days in this truly wild paradise we can wholeheartedly agree.

My husband Ray has been a T10/11 paraplegic for the last 30 years. We have never ventured very far but having won a holiday for two in a competition, we decided to accept the challenge of a safari.

We took a British Airways night flight to Harare economy class, which was a most uncomfortable ten-hour flight.

Our first stop was a one-night stay at a Cresta Jameson Hotel.

The room was excellent but the door of the ensuite bathroom could not be closed with the wheelchair inside. It did, however, have excellent service and two large lifts.

We flew Air Zimbabwe to Kariba. All transfers on the small plane were manual but everyone was so helpful and caring that we did not lose the wheelchair once.

Kariba has the famous Kariba Dam which created Lake Kariba – literally a man-made ocean 280km long and approximately 60km wide – a boundary between Zimbabwe and Zambia. The shoreline abounds with game. The waters are home to large herds of hippos and many species of

From Kariba it is a 15-minute air hop to Tiger Bay, a safari resort at the mouth of the Ume River. Prior notice resulted in us getting the honeymoon suite! Level brick paths were everywhere and there was level access to the swimming pool. The openended bedroom meant we sat in bed watching the sun rise over the distant hills, listening to the hippos.

Our first safari was on water. The landrover appeared and Ray was carried from this to the back jetty. The car was met by the boat and Ray was lifted on board.

While on the trip we saw hippos, elephants, zebra, koedoe, water buffalo and crocodiles as well as various birds. We returned in a sunset which almost set the lake on fire - breathtaking.

A four-wheel drive with guide took us on our overland safari through amazing countryside and villages. We visited Victoria Falls which is, without doubt, one of the most spectacular natural wonders of the world.

The Zambezi River plunges through a chasm 1,700m wide in a series of magnificent cataracts. All but one viewing point is accessible and a flat path runs right round. Lunch at the opulent, old-style colonial Victoria Falls Hotel afterwards was a special treat.

We then stayed at Detema Lodge in Hwange National Park for two days. Ray could not quite get in the shower but everywhere else was accessible and the staff were wonderful.

We both went on safari in the national park which, at 14,000sq m, is one of South Africa's largest protected wilderness areas.

The park's network of game viewing roads are regularly crossed by herds of elephants, impala and wildebeest.

Zimbabwe's second city in the heart of Matabeleland was our final stop – a friendly, spacious city rich in old colonial buildings. It was so easy getting around and there was not much traffic.

There is plenty to see including Central Parks and the wheelchair-friendly Museum of Natural History which houses a superb Cecil Rhodes exhibition. If we had stayed longer we certainly would have considered hiring a car.

Factfile

The Kuoni Safari starts at £1,229 per person. Flights to South Africa, Johannesburg and the internal one-hour flight onto Bulawayo cost a total of £480 per person.

Alison Viña on a break for disabled people and carers

Everybody needs a holiday, including carers. Winged Fellowship has five holiday centres around the UK where you and your family can take advantage of good facilities, entertainments and excursions and have a complete break from the day-to-day

Bill and Lillian Jane Wyatt are two satisfied customers. Lillian Jane needs 24-hour care. Bill, who is 85, was told he needed a break from caring by his doctor and Winged Fellowship's Crabhill

House was recommended. Set in the heart of the Surrey countryside, the centre boasts a swimming pool, conservatory and a craft room where you can try your hand at anything from oil painting to glass engraving.

Excursions are arranged and there is entertainment in the evenings.

During the Wyatts' stay they went on day trips to Brighton and London. They enjoyed the independence they had on the days out. "You could do what you wanted," says Bill. "When you got there, you had lunch and then went your separate ways with your carer."

Bill was impressed by the professional care his wife was given. "You didn't have to worry about a thing. The staff were all so helpful."

The couple are now looking forward to a trip to the the Winged Fellowship's Jubilee Lodge in Essex for 11 years. So why does she keep going Southampton centre in March.

Ceri Ager has been visiting

"The facilities are fantastic, the food is lovely and everybody looks after you there," she says.

Trips range from going to the dog tracks to ice skating something Ceri has missed since she became disabled.

"They make a square board that will take a wheelchair with two skates underneath and whizz you around. I love the feeling of cool air.

"For a fortnight, you get the chance to do things you never normally do. They think of everything possible to make life different."

Save £s on holiday cash

Changing holiday money can be expensive with high street banks charging a hefty commission. A bank may charge 2 per cent commission. So on £500 it would take £10. Foreign money dealer Thomas Exchange (no relation to Thomas Cook) is offering DN readers the chance to buy or sell any foreign currency commission free. And they guarantee that their exchange rates will be in line with high street banks or better. You can also buy American Express foreign currency travellers cheques without commission.

Thomas Exchange has been established in London for 19 years. It supplies currency to many banks and travel agents and is happy to give advice.

So, cut out the middle man. Either visit its offices at 13 Maddox Street, London, with a copy of this offer, or use their mail-order service (£4.50 will be charged for postage).

For more details, tel: 0171-493 1300. Offer open until 31 December 1997.

Last is first

Congratulations to Edward Last from Camberley (above). Edward's mum, Betty, has won an activity holiday for two to Churchtown Adventure Centre (DN, January). She'll be taking Edward, 13, who has muscular dystrophy.

Betty couldn't believe she'd won. "I've never won anything in my life" she said. But she was thrilled as the family haven't booked a holiday this year.

Bristol's ups and downs

Bristol is an old and hilly city which has become trendy. But are its disabled residents in fashion? Helen Gregory finds out.

Bristol is an historic city with many traces of its past still evi-

Parts of the original Saxon settlement have been left, and the Old Town quarter, the harbour and the spectacular Clifton Suspension Bridge all add to its individuality.

Bristol is also a modern city, increasingly popular with young people. It claims to be the shopping centre of the South West as well as having a lively cultural scene with theatres, art galleries and regular festivals throughout the year. Unfortunately, because of its position and historic buildings, the city is not always accessible to disabled visitors and residents. The recent reorganisation of the local authority and proposed cuts in services are not helping.

Getting there

Bristol has links with many major cities. Trains from London Paddington run frequently to Bristol Temple Meads, tel: 0117-927 6603, in the city centre and Bristol Parkway, tel: (0345)

There is also a service from London Waterloo to Bristol Temple Meads. If you are driving, the M32 links both the M4 and M5 into the centre of the city.

Entertainment

Disabled people out for a night on the town can use the free information and booking service Direct Line, tel: 0117-929 9758, which has a quarterly newsletter detailing all shows and information on access.

Bristol's Theatre Royal and New Vic, tel: 0117-987 7877, has ramp access, a loop system, adapted toilets, and sometimes signed performances. It also offers special rates for wheelchair users and escorts.

Wheelchair users have to have an escort to enjoy shows at The Hippodrome, tel: 0117-929 9444. It has signed performances, a loop system and offers special rates for some shows.

The town has two cinemas with facilities for disabled people, the Arnolfini, tel: 0117-929 9191, and the Cannon, tel: 0117-926 2848. Both cinemas need prior notice for taking guide dogs and only have wheelchair access in screen

The nightclub Chicago Rock, tel: 0117-929 1361, is accessible, along with Lakotta, tel: 0117-907 0065.

The Industrial Museum, tel: 0117-925 1470, asks disabled visitors to call before they arrive but promises good wheelchair access and adapted toilets.

Advisors are a real benefit

Bristol's Disability Advice Centre takes about 50 calls a week, and the numbers using the service are increasing each year.

Co-ordinator Sandra Garrett says they have seen a 40 per cent increase on last year, and nearly all the calls are benefit enquiries.

Ms Garrett says cutbacks to services in the city are having an impact on disabled people, prompting their need for help and advice.

"Our work includes

representing disabled people at tribunals and helping them fill in forms – we find that many people have been turned down for benefits such as Incapacity Benefit."

Kath Arnold, who has chronic ME and multiple allergies, is using the centre to help her re-apply for the care component of her disability living allowance.

"The amount wasn't adequate but I was too exhausted to appeal myself," she says. "The service has enabled me to understand the system and it has also empowered me."

Easing student stress

An introduction letter in braille convinced Auriol Britton that Bristol University was the right choice for her.

A year later Auriol, who is blind, has settled into college life and is enjoying her course in theology and religious studies.

"I was nervous about going to college because of my visual impairment," she says.

"But I've found that there is a really close relationship between people in the town and students. I don't think it's particularly important for disabled students to bond with each other."

Paul Sullivan, who is also blind, is head of the Disabilities Unit, tel: 0117-928 7150, which gives advice to disabled students at Bristol.

Paul Sullivan and Auriol Britton

He admits that disabled students do not seem to get together very often, but says: "I expect they are happy anyway.

"There are at least 130 fulltime disabled students here and 50 part-time disabled students. There are probably more, but not everyone informs us.

"Bristol is a hilly city and many college buildings are old which means we don't get too many students with mobility problems, but there are some wheelchair users here."

The unit gives advice on benefits and supports grant applications as well as offering awareness training for staff and helping departments to make adjustments for students.

Playtime: Four-year-old Thomas Knight enjoys a musical morning at the The Woodside Family Centre. The centre was opened in 1993 as a drop-in facility which is now used by 80 families with visually impaired, deafblind and multi-needs sensory impaired children and young people. While there, children can play with musical instruments, use the toy library and play in the sensory stimulation room with staff, while their parents relax. Mum Jane Knight has been going to the centre with Thomas for the last three-and-a-half years. She says: "It's great for him to meet children with similar problems. His development has benefited and we love coming as it's such a safe environment."

'We're stroppy and proud'

The West of England Centre for Integrated Living (WECIL), tel: 0117-983 2828, is one of the biggest in the country, run by 26 disabled staff.

Its projects include the disability arts agency, disability equality training and a care management and advocacy project where disabled advocates support disabled people who are being assessed.

Sixty people have used its integrated living scheme of which director Ruth Pickersgill is especially proud.

Each project has an advisory Ms Pickersgill sub-committee which reports back on how people feel about the service. "We try and listen so people get a service which they want," she says.

However, council cuts and changes mean the centre is facing possible redundancies which Ms Pickersgill will fight.

"We have a reputation for being stroppy but this is a positive thing. We are demanding rights and have managed to make disability issues high profile."

The West of England Coalition of Disabled People, tel: 0117-949 7707, is closely linked to WECIL. It campaigns on disability issues and organises a variety of meetings and events, from young people's groups to equality training. It is committed to supporting Bristol's inclusive education policy.

Its workload has quadrupled in the last few years and coordinator Penny Germon says the job is getting harder as the cuts hit in.

"Everyone's very angry about the total lack of consultation of disabled people on important matters, such as the closure of day centres."

The coalition has worked to make sure Bristol City Council's equal opportunities policy reflected its aims, and although the council has a disability advisory sub committee, Ms Germon believes it needs to have a longterm strategic approach towards issues affecting disabled people.

Living Centre on the block

The Bristol Disabled Living Centre (DLC) faces an uncertain future while the Government decides whether to sell its three-acre site.

Bristol City Council blocked the Government's bid to sell the site at Fishponds for residential use last year. The Government appealed against the decision in July.

Director John Saliba said: "We've had very positive responses from the local community and the council wants us to stay open.

"Last year more than 4,500 people visited our site, but if we lose the appeal, it will be very difficult for us to find another accessible, central site."

The centre was set up three years ago to give advice and show equipment to disabled people and was the first userled centre, run by disabled people.

Arts festival is a female affair

Exhibition

One-woman variety show Diane Pungartnik hopes that her festival for disabled women will go some way to relieving the "double burden" they face.

The co-ordinator of the London Disability Arts Forum (LDAF) and producer of the Disabled/Woman festival makes no excuses for what she claims is a unique event.

Diane Pungartnik

Californian-born Ms Pungartnik, 39, believes women have to deal with the burden of their disability as well as discrimination from men who dominate the arts scene.

"The festival will give them an opportunity to be seen, and for other disabled women to become involved," she says.

It includes exhibitions by disabled photographers Claire Collison and Margaret Mitchell.

Claire Collison's Alternative

Claire Collison's Alternative Passports looks at passports, ID cards and unorthodox ways of identification. Margaret Mitchell's Personal Myths explores her epilepsy through self-portraits.

Workshops developing the themes will run alongside the two exhibitions. They will be open exclusively to disabled women where they can creatively illustrate their identity.

Ms Pungartnik believes the life drawing workshop she has organised, using only disabled tutors and models, is a first and hopes it will prove popular with disabled artists.

She has also formed the Really Disabled Theatre Company using three actors to perform a new play, Deliverance, which follows the life of a disabled woman using personal experience and fantasy.

After she commits a crime, the audience gets to decide her fate, with tragi-comic results.

It is Nottingham-based playwright Cathy Gibson's first staged production and she has used the theme of euthanasia and the computer package from Australia, Deliverance which delivers a lethal injection, to develop her theme of being delivered from responsibility.

Ms Pungartnik would like to tour the show around the UK as she believes there are too few drama groups run by disabled people.

"People don't take enough interest in us, and if they do, it is usually for the wrong reasons

Margaret Mitchell's self portrait: 11 years after (epilepsy) such as on a charitable basis or that they think we're a novelty."

A singer, comedian and actress, Diane Pungartnik moved to the UK in 1981. After running other small theatre companies and touring with her one-woman show, she became involved with the LDAF in 1992 when she wrote a show about her epilepsy.

"I soon found out that if you want to kill an audience, mention epilepsy. People are frightened and repelled by it as it still carries a huge stigma.

"Raising awareness has been very gruelling. I see producing this festival as a way of putting the group in a better position to get noticed.

"We lost our bid for lottery money and I am sure it is because the council prefers not to give to groups run by disabled people. I'm on the rampage."

Helen Gregory

The festival runs from Monday 10 March to Saturday 16 March at Turtle Key Arts Centre in Farm Lane, London, tel: 0171-916 5484/0171-916 6350 (minicom).

Books

Autism, Preparing for Adulthood

by Patricia Howlin £12.95, Jessica Kingley Publishers

The dilemma of the parent of an autistic child when reading most books is that one is usually faced with the dual reactions of a) "gosh, that's all too familiar" and b) "but my child's not like that".

Unlike many authors,
Patricia Howlin has compiled a wide variety of case material, from lots of different people with autism, which she uses effectively to highlight issues which professionals, carers and parents of autistic people need to address as adulthood approaches. There are no trite answers or doctrines here, but a review of what has and hasn't worked successfully for others.

This is not a comfortable book for a parent. What you want to read is something desperately hopeful, but what you actually need to read is something realistic and pragmatic, and this work is definitely the latter.

Not that there aren't some inspiringly optimistic accounts of adult life despite autism, because there are.

I suspect this will become a very useful reference book for parents as the child reaches different stages.

Frankly, it's a bit much to read all in one sitting when you are emotionally involved. The clearly marked chapters and paragraphs would suggest that Patricia Howlin has recognised this and made it simple for readers to dip into the subjects they need.

For professionals this should be a fascinating read as well as an essential reference book. There was quite a gap in the available literature.

Music

About to Choke

Unless Neil Young, Leonard Cohen and REM are your favourite bands, Vic Chestnutt's (above) latest album About to Choke may not be to your taste. Listening to it, the term that first sprang to mind was "music to hang yourself to" and I'm a fan of the aforementioned bands.

About to Choke grows on you. It took three listens before I decided I liked it. Vic's voice develops from a drone to a sound with more feeling and resonance. It could never be described as uplifting, but perhaps inspirational.

This is his fifth album but the first since signing to the major US label Capitol. To his credit, artists such as Madonna and Garbage have covered his previous work. Vic has also worked with REM's Michael Stipe and the influence is clear. Several songs stand out.

"Ladre" and "Little Vacation" are mellow but have a more upbeat sound than some of the other tracks.

"Degenerate" has the simple guitar strumming that I like and does not fall into the sometimes self-indulgence of Neil Young. The press release tells of Vic's maturity and development from his previous style of "cackle and hum". Although not all the cackle and hum has disappeared, this does not weaken the album.

About to Choke isn't easy listening or good party music well, I suppose that depends on the kind of parties you have!

It's an album to listen to and I had no problems swallowing it. Despite my initial impressions, this is not suicidal music. It gets close but pulls back from the edge and encourages a little more thought.

Film

Michael Turner

It would be nice to believe that the final scene of Extreme Measures was intended to be ironic. Coming at the end of this thriller about a medical researcher's efforts to find a cure for paralysis, this scene on a steep set of steps outside a university research centre should have at least carried a mild sense of irony.

Such subtlety is beyond the scope of this otherwise enjoyable thriller. Hugh Grant, as a British doctor in New York, adds some dry wit to the proceedings, but its treatment of disability is entirely serious and entirely negative.

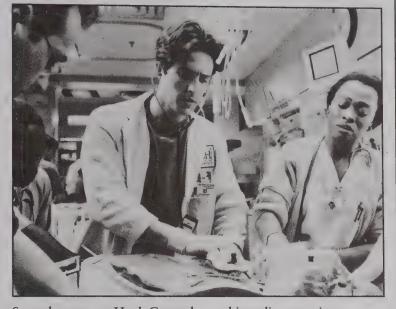

Grant uncovers research being carried out on homeless people to find a method of repairing spinal injuries. As well as using such "extreme measures" in their research, the villains - led by Gene Hackman - will go to any lengths to protect their work.

Extreme Measures

What is surprising is that the research is actively supported by a group of people with paraplegia. Their actions range from financially backing the research, to clobbering Grant with a baseball bat. As ever, the celluloid depiction of paralysis centres on people obsessed with finding a cure for their disability. While Extreme Measures is clearly not intended as a liberal movie to be treated at face value, its negation of the lives and value of disabled people cannot be pushed to one side.

The price of this entertainment is the perpetuation of the myth that a cure is all disabled people want, rather than more prosaic measures like ramps and induction loops.

Television

Chris Davies

Jamie Beddard, who played the middle Arthur in Skallagrigg, popped up again in a mainstream tv drama, Common as Muck (BBC1, 15 January), about dustmen trying to find alternative means of employment.

One of them, hired to paint the ceiling of a church, is discouraged by his wife who says he has no imagination. So he goes back to the church under cover of night and paints a highly accurate copy of a panel from the Sistine Chapel.

When he returns to work the next day, the word is out that some kind of miracle has been performed. There is even a group of disabled people waiting to be "cured", including Gavin, played by Jamie.

They turn up day after day until the situation is resolved.

Nobody could take this storyline as being anywhere near reality. It's quirky, idiosyncratic, meant to amuse, but not serious drama.

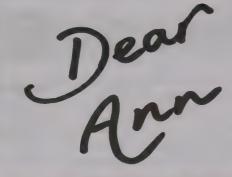

The disability context is quite difficult to work out. Is it meant to be a caustic comment on religious miracles, or a positive portrayal of healthy cynicism on behalf of disabled people? Jamie is a good actor and I'm glad he was chosen, but whether his part is valuable is, at best, debatable.

I'm about to do something I never thought I would do. I happened accidentally to watch the afternoon chat show Esther, on deaf people (BBC2, 15 January), and for making a mainstream audience aware of the issue, I award it seven-anda-half out of ten.

With an audience of almost entirely deaf people, the programme covered the differences between those who have acquired deafness, those who prefer to be oral, and those who prefer deaf culture, very adequately. It even gave Esther Rantzen's husband, Desmond Wilcox, who is deaf himself, the chance to have a jibe at his wife for talking with her head facing away from him.

With so many interpreters in the studio, it was obvious that the deaf people on the show were well served. But it was different for a deaf viewer because, although the programme had closed captions, none of it was interpreted for sign language using viewers. It's a shame that the community being discussed had limited access to the discussion. Nice try, Esther, but think it through, please.

How do I tell her life isn't all bad?

My 19-year-old daughter was born with a club foot which was straightened with intensive physiotherapy while she was a baby.

She has spent many years playing sport and dancing but has now been told that the falls she has been having and the pains in her legs and back are all associated. It is likely that she will be in a wheelchair in three or four years' time. Her boyfriend has not visited since her last fall.

She has had a rough life, including being sexually abused. Recently, she has gone from one bad relationship to another. I really do not know what to do.

Do you know of any sports she can do (she walks with crutches most of the time), or any sports holidays I could take her on with the rest of the family? Or do you know of any way she could meet other people in the 18-25 age group who could persuade her that her life in the future will not be all bad.

Jennie, Lowestoft Many thanks for your letter and I am very sorry to hear about the troubles your daughter is having.

It is very disappointing that she may not be able to continue with her dancing and sports. Has she seen an orthopaedic consultant? It is obviously important that she sees a suitable medical professional who can advise her.

It also seems that she could benefit from seeing a counsellor who would understand her problems arising from the sexual abuse leading to her difficulties with personal relationships.

If she has a poor self image and a lack of confidence, a counsellor would be able to help her. She needs to ask her GP to refer her.

As she gains in self confidence she may then be able to distinguish those men who are unsuitable.

Regarding suitable sports for your daughter, I suggest she contacts the local BSAD (British Sports Association for the Disabled) regional office. They would be glad to help and advise her.

A holiday might be just the ticket. The Holiday Care Service has holiday activity sheets including sporting interests. It also has a leaflet advising on help with paying for a holiday.

I wonder if your daughter has ever been in touch with PHAB (Physically Disabled and Able-Bodied). Local clubs are for young people to get together for social, sports and leisure activities. DN's telephone counsellor, Lin Berwick, would also be glad to help.

Be honest in the search for a mate

"I need a sex life," says Brian of Brighton (DN, December 1996), and I am sorry he has a problem. Could it be the way he presents himself?

I am 50 years old and recently divorced. My ex-wife and family all felt I was not acting as a crip should — that is playing the veggie in a chair.

Since my divorce I have had three affairs with able-bodied women my own age and younger.

I have found it is the way you present yourself which knocks down the images that people have of disabled people.

I have learnt that those who I had thought of as friends were horrified to think that I should be having sex with able-bodied females. Talking to and holding their hands was OK, but to have sex was a no-go area. These so-called friends went the same way as my ex-wife and family.

I find that an honest approach to yourself and the woman you would like to go out with works if you show confidence, have a good sense of humour and do not whine about your disability.

I have not found Miss Right yet, but it is fun looking around again. Just keep on trying Brian and changing your method until it works for you.

Ken, Coventry

You are obviously doing a good job in changing the image endured by disabled people. It seems that you have learnt who your friends really are and that is no bad thing.

It really is preposterous that people should be shocked that you are having sex with ablebodied women.

No doubt if you fall in love with a disabled woman you could also show the world a more positive image of women with disabilities.

I want a way to strike the right note

As a 55-year-old with an MEtype illness and arthritis, I would very much like to start studying music again. My aim would be to sit a

My aim would be to sit a diploma exam in a few years time.

I have found a music teacher who would be willing to make home visits but I cannot afford the fees and books required.

Do you know of any charities or trusts which would offer financial help to disabled people?

Teresa, Rhyl

I am afraid I do not know of any charities which offer financial help of this kind.

However, I would like to suggest you contact Kathryn Deane of Sound Sense. I have just spoken to her (I did not mention your name) and she would very much like to hear from you.

She may be able to offer some helpful advice and suggestions. I do urge you to write to her. It would be helpful if you told her the level you have already reached and some details about your general interest in music.

Having taken over the excellent records from the National Music and Disability Information Service, which was forced to close for lack of funding, Sound Sense now has the best set of information files in the business on most aspects of music and disability.

Do let me know how you get on. I am sure our readers would like to hear of your progress.

➤ PISCES (20 Feb-20 Mar) Discussions with a loved one could improve things. Opposition from Mars to Venus in Pisces on the 20th could bring a desire to express yourself in a difficult relationship.

➤ ARIES (21 Mar-20 April) Your ruling planet, Mars, is moving backwards in Virgo. This could take some of the fire out of your enthusiasm. It may not be a big thing, but think before you act. TAURUS (21 April-21 May) Your life may feel a bit out of kilter right now. Wait things out and respond to the best offers only.

GEMINI (22 May-22 June) In mid-month a realisation may come that will make your next step clearer. Try and move on. Work could take an upturn, possibly at the expense of something in a relationship. CANCER (23 June-23 July) Emotional issues come to the fore around the 19th. Be willing to talk things through but try not to stick too rigidly to your guns. You will need your partner's support when things hot up at work.

LEO (24 July-23 Aug) You may get the urge to try out a new idea but feel tense about it. Don't give up — use the pent up feeling to gather your creative forces and produce some good work.

Mars is moving backwards after the 9th. With opposition from Venus and the Sun, frustrations may arise in relationships. Take the quietest option.

LIBRA* (24 Sept-23 Oct) The full moon in Libra on the 24th full moon in Libra on the 24th brings energy which may not work smoothly. Be careful about what you say.

Scorpios in love could get closer to the object of their desires this month. This is a time for relating.

SAGITTARIUS (23 Nov-21 Dec) There seems to be work piling up all around you. Try not to get too stressed – the heat should soon be off.

Give in to your creative urges. This is a month of new ideas which will really help you along.

Aquarius (21 Jan-19 Feb) After a hectic February, March brings an opportunity to take stock. Make the most of it as there are busy times ahead.

Bright ideas

If you've got a sweet tooth, counteract the effects of plaque and gingivitis (the commonest form of gum disease) with the new sonicare electronic toothbrush. The sonicare generates 31,000 brush strokes a minute. If, after you've used the sonicare for 90 days, your dentist doesn't see an improvement, you can claim a full refund. Priced at £129.50 from selected Boots stores, with an Easter offer of a £10 money back voucher. For details, tel: (0541) 550022.

Relief from aches and pains can be found with Champ hot or cold compression wraps (above). Pop the hot wraps (£8.45) into your microwave for up to 90 seconds; the cold compress (£6.95) chills to 5°C within seconds of snapping the pack, and can be re-used by storing in the freezer. Also from the Champ range is the hot mitt (£18.95), which is warmed up in the microwave and worn on the hand to relieve arthritis or rheumatism. Contact Chemist Brokers on tel: (01705) 219900.

This time of year sees many people slipping or falling on wet pavements. Peter Schweiger, managing director of James Taylor & Son, suggests putting slip-resistant sticker soles onto your shoes if the soles are worn and no longer have good grip. A DIY kit costs £10 incl p&p; Tel: 0171-935 4149.

The Royal National Institute for the Blind has produced a new scientific talking calculator. In a sloping desktop case, the calculator has a key tactile membrane which does not desensitise fingertips, making it easier to read braille. It has no display but relies on high quality natural speech output which can be used with headphones. It plugs into a computer or printer, and you can choose the font size of the printout. £180 from RNIB Customer Services on tel: (0345) 456457.

THE ULTRA LIGHTWEIGHT TVS BRACE FOR ARTHRITIC KNEES

TELESCOPIC VALGUS (KNOCK KNEE)/VARUS (BOW LEG) SUPPORT

The primary function of the brace is to align or straighten the limb, which may have deformed to a bow or knock knee position, due to weakness of the joint. This is usually caused by an arthritic condition, resulting in pain or undue aching when standing or walking. The brace gives full freedom of leg movement and in many cases helps with hyperextention, where the knee allows the leg to bend to the rear.

DIRECTOR

up to £25,000 pa (inc London Weighting)

This person will have confidence, flair and imagination, as well as the skills necessary to bring the philosophy of inclusion into the public arena.

This is a newly created post, (funded by the National Lottery Charities Board) to head up a young and energetic charity at an exciting and challenging stage in its development. Set up by a group of parents in London in 1984, Parents for Inclusion provides support to parents of children with Special Educational Needs who wish their children to take part in the ordinary normal life of the community. This includes being taught with other young people in ordinary schools.

We are looking for someone to promote the organisation nationally, to support the project workers, to develop the Helpline, and to initiate long term funding strategy.

Parents for Inclusion is committed to equal opportunities, and welcomes applications from disabled people. Our office in Vauxhall is fully accessible with ample car parking space. Please send A4 S.A.E. for an application form (Print/Large Print/Bralle/Tape available) to: Parents for Inclusion, Unit 2, 70 South Lambeth Rd, London SW8 1RL. Personal

I'M CHRIS, AGE 37, girth 32, and 5ft, 6in short. My disability is that society does not provide blind people like myself with what I need. I like sipping red wine while eating Italian food, visiting art galleries, creating sculpture, canoeing down the river, cuddling women in silk pajamas, and having other adventures. If you are womanly, near East London and want a long-term relationship with a guy who is brightly dressed, sensitive, politically to the left of Tony Blair and has so little sense of humour it almost makes people laugh then try me. Box No. 042

HI, I'M A 25-YEAR-OLD white male, slightly disabled on my left side. I would like to meet an able-bodied or slightly disabled female for friendship leading to a possible romance. Please enclose a photo. Box No. 043

OPEN-MINDED, FUN-LOVING male, 31, with cerebral palsy, seeks female, 25-35 for friendship and possibly romance. Hobbies: football, socialising and travel. Photo appreciated. All letters answered. Box No. 044

KIND, CARING, AFFECTIONATE, homeloving man in his 50s. Slightly disabled with cerebral palsy. Still searching for home-loving lady who also enjoys lots of cuddles and physical pleasure as much as I do. If you are out there, please write to me before I get too old for cuddles. Box

I AM LOOKING for a young lady in her 40s. I am 49, very active. I love animals as I do animal rights protesting. I love travel. I am 5ft 6in tall, and have a slight disability in my left leg. No time wasters please. Photo would be nice. Box No. 046

I AM A WIDOW, 38. I am looking for a special man for happy friendship and romance. I am disabled and deaf. I live in Stockport. Photo and letters please. Box

DISABLED LONE PARENT with cerebral palsy seeks to share experiences with other disabled parents. Box No. 048

DISABLED MAN WITH cerebral palsy looking for caring lady for relationship, 18-25. Independent, own flat, dog etc. I run my own mobile disco and lead life to the full. Anybody willing to take me on? Full pedigree guaranteed. Box No. 049

SINGLE MALE, 35, seeks female for friendship and possibly more. Must have a good sense of humour, be interested in music of any kind and films. Must like cats. I have cerebral palsy (legs only). Box

MALE AGED 34 who has hydrocephalus seeks adult with a learning difficulty who would like to play football. Box No. 051

WANT TO FIND myself some good friends, folk who are intelligent, witty and kind. I am a young composer of classical music. Are there any disabled students who would like to write to me and maybe meet up sometimes for a sort of gang outing to the lochs of Scotland or to an Indian restaurant or to lobby MPs and make the world a fun place? Sometimes I find myself miserable and sorry for myself just cos I'm sodding well different from mainstream doddle bodied morons. Box No. 052

ARE YOU FIT ENOUGH to push me and drive? I am in my mid 40s, use a wheelchair, live in Cornwall, and would like companionship. I would like to do everything, go everywhere in this country. I have many interests and would like a woman. Box No. 053

DISABLED WIDOWER, easy going. Large house, car, garden. I am tall, with dark hair and green eyes. I'm looking for a lady to share my life - a lady who is caring and understanding. I have MS. Photo appreciated. South East coast. Box
